

KHANAQIN WAR CEMETERY

ROLL OF HONOUR

1942 - 1945

The names of the 542 Polish, Indian and Arab Legion dead buried in Khanaqin War Cemetery, Diyala, Iraq

Their names are commemorated on the Khanaqin Memorial at Baghdad (North Gate) War Cemetery

Khanaqin War Cemetery

Khanaqin stands on the Diyala River in north-eastern Iraq, close to the frontier with Persia. Its oil refinery, completed in 1927, was the first in Iraq. In 1942 the town became a Polish town. The Polish forces commanded by General Wladyslaw Anders reached Iraq from the Soviet Union by way of Persia, and with them came thousands of Polish civilians who had been deported into the Soviet interior. A Polish camp and a Polish field hospital were established at Khanaqin, and many of the soldiers arrived in poor health after years of imprisonment and exile.

The war cemetery was established in 1942. No fighting took place at Khanaqin. The Polish dead died of sickness and by accident, in the camp and in the field hospital, which alone admitted 2,760 patients between September and the end of November 1942. In all, 437 Polish servicemen and servicewomen are buried here. Nine of them are women, seven volunteers of the Polish Women's Auxiliary Service and two nurses.

Alongside them lie 102 soldiers of the Indian Army, who served in Iraq in the same years, 1942 to 1945, in its transport, signals, veterinary, engineer, ordnance, medical and infantry units. Their graves lie in Plots 4 and 5 of the cemetery, the plots the Commission's plan marks as the Mohammedan plots. The youngest of all the dead at Khanaqin was 15 years old. The family details recorded for the Indian soldiers by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission, their parents, their home villages and their wives, are printed beneath their names. Three soldiers of the Arab Legion, who died in 1944 and 1945, complete the roll.

In September 1965 the Commonwealth War Graves Commission decided that the cemetery, in a sensitive border area, could no longer be maintained. The dead were left in their graves at Khanaqin, and their names were commemorated instead on the Khanaqin Memorial at Baghdad (North Gate) War Cemetery. The position of every grave is recorded in the Commission's plan of the cemetery, drawn in 1955. Fragments of three of the original headstones, those of Kapral Z. Piechocki, Strzelec J. Lastowski and Signalman Muhammad Juma, are preserved in the museum.

How to read this roll

The names are arranged in three sections, Polish, Indian and Arab Legion, and alphabetically within each section. Ranks, units and service numbers are given exactly as the Commonwealth War Graves Commission records them, and the Polish unit abbreviations are the Commission's own. An age is shown only where the Commission recorded one. The Commission holds a grave reference for only one man, Rifleman Lastowski, whose grave is Plot 3, Row H, Grave 12. The Commission does not record the faith of individual men. The Polish dead were in the great majority Roman Catholic, and the Indian graves lie in the plots the cemetery plan marks as the Mohammedan plots.

Lest we forget
